You can't form your question into words.

>say goodbye
(to Galatea)
[For instructions on talking to someone, type 'help'.]

>help
This is an exercise in NPC interactivity. There's no puzzle and no set solution, but a number of options with a number of c

HINTS: Ask or tell her about things that you can see, that she mentions, or that you think of yourself. Interact with her ph if she does anything herself. Repeat actions. The order in which you do things is critical: the character's mood and the pri conversation will determine how she reacts.

VERBS: Many standard verbs have been disabled. All the sensory ones (LOOK, LISTEN, SMELL, TOUCH, TASTE) re interaction verbs ASK, TELL, HELLO, GOODBYE, and SORRY; KISS, HUG, and ATTACK. You may also find useful ' companion THINK ABOUT, which will remind you of the state of conversation on a given topic. The verb RECAP gives topics that you've discussed so far; if she's told you that she's said all she knows on that topic, it appears in italics.

SHORTCUT: 'Ask her about' and 'tell her about' may be abbreviated to A and T. So >A CHEESE is the same as >ASK G CHEESE.

There is an assortment of walkthroughs available at http://emshort.home.mindspring.com/cheats.htm, but I suggest not loc have already experimented somewhat.

Questions/comments/bug reports: emshort@mindspring.com. See also CREDITS.

>goodbye
"Well. I suppose I'll be going," you say.

"Very well," she remarks. (Strange, almost inhuman, the vocals on this piece.)

You head out, feeling a little guilty. To do a responsible assessment of a piece, you should spend more time interacting wi that you never so much as touched her -- you, who have something of a reputation for your attention to tactile detail.

On the other hand, you already have more than enough to say about the exhibit as a whole.

 The End *****

Would you like to RESTART, RESTORE a saved game or QUIT?
> eave
Please give one of the answers above.
> quit